

Spider Angioma

A magnified view of a spider angioma showing a central feeding vessel leading to other telangiectatic vessels arranged in the shape of spider legs. Pressure over the central vessels causes blanching of the entire lesion, confirming its vascular nature. In patients with cirrhosis, spider angiomas are most commonly seen on the upper chest, face, and back.