Andrew Jameson is an Infectious Diseases physician at Trinity Health Grand Rapids. He attended medical school at Wayne State University, completed internal medicine residency at Michigan State University, and ID fellowship at the University of Michigan. He enjoys both medical education, as well as clinical care. His clinical interests include HIV care, atypical mycobacterium, and infections in immunocompromised hosts. He was one of the clinical leaders for Trinity Health in their response to the COVID-19 pandemic, serving on local, state, and national committees helping to formulate the healthcare community's response to that crisis. Dr. Jameson also had an active role in medical education at MSU where he serves as clerkship director and works with medical students, residents and fellows in the clinical setting.
