Lead On ACP: Advocacy in Action

ACP envisions a health care system where:

Everyone has coverage for and access to the care they need, at a cost they and the country can afford.

Social factors that contribute to poor and inequitable health (social determinants) are ameliorated; barriers to care for vulnerable and underserved populations are overcome; and no person is discriminated against based on characteristics of personal identity.

Payment and delivery systems put the interests of patients first, by supporting physicians and their care teams in delivering high-value and patient-centered care.

Spending is redirected from unnecessary administrative costs to funding health care coverage and research, public health, and interventions to address social determinants of health.

Clinicians and hospitals deliver high-value and evidence-based care within available resources, as determined through a process that prioritizes and allocates funding and resources with the engagement of the public and physicians.

Better is possible: Invest in Primary Care

- Only between 5% and 10% of health care dollars are spent on primary care, but greater use of primary care is associated with decreased health expenditures, higher patient satisfaction, fewer hospitalizations and emergency department visits, and lower mortality.
- State-level analyses show an association between investment in primary care and reductions in emergency department visits, total hospitalizations, and hospitalizations for ambulatory care-sensitive conditions.
- U.S. markets with larger numbers of primary care physicians have lower costs and higher quality of care.

Medical students, residents and fellows: Mission critical for ACP

- Medical students, residents and fellows are vitally important to ACP's mission, strategic initiatives and policy development
- ACP's Governance structure reflects their importance with Councils of Medical Student Members and Resident and Fellow Members
- The Chairs of these Councils are members of the ACP's Board of Regents and participate fully in the Governance of the College
- Members of the Councils serve on most ACP committees where they help shape College policies
