Success stories in driving up adult immunization rates

KevinMD.com
As we continue to lead longer and healthier lives, too many Americans aren’t taking advantage of an easily accessible set of tools that could protect their well-being into old age: adult vaccines. As a nation, we’ve embraced a regular schedule of vaccines for our children. But science shows that they are proven life-savers for us grown-ups, too. The numbers are staggering: tens of thousands of Americans die each year from flu while another 200,000 people will be hospitalized with the disease. READ MORE

Medicare penalties for patient injuries to hit Georgia hospitals hard

Georgia Health News
About one-third of eligible Georgia hospitals will see a reduction in Medicare payments in 2018 because of a high rate of patient injuries. The 35 percent penalized in Georgia is a higher percentage than all but five other states, a Kaiser Health News report reveals.
The Georgia hospitals penalized include some of the state’s biggest and best-known.

Report: VA, Cerner EHR deal held up after spat over interoperability definition

Healthcare IT

The U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs’ EHR contract with Cerner was set to be signed this fall, but a new report from Politico found that it’s been held up over disagreements between executives on the definition of interoperability. VA Secretary David Shulkin, M.D., selected Cerner in a no-bid contract in June to replace the agency’s legacy VistA EHR as a way to align data between the VA and the Department of Defense, which already runs on Cerner. The contract is estimated at about $10 billion or more. READ MORE
