As open enrollment nears, insurance exchanges face plenty of uncertainty

Georgia Health News
Details surrounding the 2018 health insurance exchanges appear as murky as ever, despite the demise this week of the latest U.S. Senate effort to change federal health law. And amid this uncertainty, open enrollment for exchange coverage begins just a month from now. Even the premium increases for Georgia’s 2018 exchange, approved this week by the Georgia insurance department, have asterisks attached to them. READ MORE

Why the EHR is essential for effective care management

Health Data Management
Only a very small percentage of patients are enrolled in CMS’ Chronic Care Management program. Care management is a notoriously complex process, and getting paid for doing care management within the Medicare CCM program has been especially difficult. Some physicians don’t believe in the value of these preventive services, many don’t know who is eligible for these services, and others deliver them but don’t know the right way to code for them and miss out on getting reimbursed appropriately. CMS completes final Medicare Part D Reconciliation for 2016

The National Law Review
CMS has completed the 2016 Final Part D Payment Reconciliation. Each Medicare Part D plan sponsor’s reconciliation reports will be available on Oct. 12. By way of background, the Medicare Part D reconciliation process is intended to ensure that the federal government pays each Part D plan sponsor appropriately. READ MORE

A 3rd perspective on the HITECH era: Why patients matter

MedCity News
Careful observers will recall two differing perspectives published in The New England Journal of Medicine in early September. The articles clashed over the impact of the Health Information Technology for Economic and Clinical Health Act. In one camp, four former national coordinators who served during the Obama administration (Vindell Washington, Karen DeSalvo, Farzad Mostashari and David Blumenthal) argued that the HITECH era was largely successful, having brought EHRs to most hospitals. Yet they didn’t deny that physicians struggle with EHR usability. Moving forward, they believe the industry must focus on interoperability and finding meaningful ways to utilize data. READ MORE
