Thank you to everyone who participated in the third annual Writing Contest! Stay tuned to learn who this year's winners are.

In the January 2018 edition of HJM&PH, we feature a paper examining the effect of the 2012 American Society for Colposcopy and Cervical Pathology (ASCCP) guidelines on identification of abnormal cervical cytology as well as the impact on resident colposcopy training. Also, a study by Williams et al. explores the role of age and race/ethnicity on recommendations for contraception. In the Medical School Hotline, read part one of a two-part series highlighting the scholarly research and service activities happening at the John A. Burns School of Medicine. Finally, in the Insights in Public Health column, learn about efforts to improve Hawai‘i's Vector Control Program to prevent arboviral disease transmission.
