

ACP Fellowship

- Fellowship in the College is an honor. It is a mark of esteem from colleagues who recognize accomplishments and achievements within the practice of medicine.
- The most important considerations for Fellowship are excellence and contributions made to both medicine and to the broader community in which the internist lives and practices. The ACP recognizes that a physician's achievements and accomplishments could be limited by the area where he or she practice or by the available resources.
- Candidates for Fellowship are recognized for exemplifying the mission and goals of the American College of Physicians in their professional lives.
